

Reflections Rubric – CSE 3000 (Fall 2024)

You must complete two (2) reflections throughout the course. These are short papers you will use to reflect on the course readings and topics, focusing on what will be relevant in your future working life.

The first reflection: Imagine you are writing an internal memo or other form of communication in your company on your topic of choice – you are writing to other experts in your field.

The Second Reflection: Imagine you are writing an op-ed for a newspaper, or have been asked to be a technical expert by a journalist on a story. Write to a public audience that does not have a technical background.

For both reflections:

- Choose a topic or reading discussed in the course.
- Write 600-800 words (about 1.5 pages single spaced)
 - A short bibliography of anything cited is required.
- Relate the content of that reading or topic to what you are learning in CSE

I want this assignment to be self-directed: choose those things that most interest you, or are the most relevant to the kind of work you hope to be doing after graduation. Be original, and have fun with it!

This can take many different forms, but generally you will want to engage with the topic/reading and do one of the following:

- Agree with the issues raised and apply them to your CSE knowledge
- Disagree with the perspective and explain why, using your knowledge of CSE.
- Modify or reinterpret the topic through your CSE experience:
 - For example, you might posit how certain moral or social ideas might shift in the context of specific technologies, or supply added considerations of greater or equal importance to those discussed.

Points breakdown: 15 total points

4 points: Knowledge of the reading/topic:

- I will not expect you to know everything, but glaring mistakes as to what the assignment intended, what the reading said, what was discussed in class, or failure to cite will lose points.

8 points: Application of your knowledge to these ideas, or these ideas to CSE

- Find connections between the social and moral ideas discussed and your expertise in whichever CSE field(s) you are interested in or will be working in.

3 points: Grammar, spelling, citation

- Readability and proper format.
- It doesn't matter which format you chose for the paper and citations, so long as it is consistent and clearly understandable.
